A letter from Vand states that a young man, wounded in the late war between France and Germany, was sent to a quiet village in Scotland, early in the month of October last, to recruit his health. He was a handsome, well-developed young man, and a thoroughly good fellow. Owing to the mildness of the climate and the interesting circumstances under which he was found his place, the boy was soon made comfortable, and was long an object of interest to head-quarters desiring him to report himself at Berlin, where the depot of his regiment was then stationed. The grief of the mother, who was a widow, was very great, but, with many vows of constancy, he tore himself away, and, in due time, arrived at Berlin. At first, his letters were filled with protestations of love, and, naturally, the mother was very anxious, as time wore on, to learn less frequently and much colder in
